Women Worst at Polls As Votes Return To House of 265 Members

By THE CANADIAN PRESS
Two women—the only women in the 265-seat House of Commons after the 1957 election—continued their lonely parliamentary existence Tuesday.
Mrs. Ellen Fairclough of Hamilton, who is secretary of state, and Miss Margaret Aiken of Toronto were the only survivors among 21 women who ran this year.
Both are Progressive Conservatives and both won easily as their party swept the country.
One of the most colorful figures in the election, fiery Charlotte Whitton, former mayor of Ottawa, slipped from the Conservative roller coaster and lost by 1,000 votes to Liberal George McIlraith in Ottawa West.
The two women candidates in Quebec—Mme. Therese Casgrain and Miss Gisele Couture, both of the CCF, ran out of the money. Mme. Casgrain when Montreal, Jacques-Cartier—LaSalle remained Conservative and Miss Couture when Montreal Mercier switched from Liberal to Conservative.
Social Creditor Mrs. Grace Gough of Carleton lost when the riding again went Progressive Conservative. So did Mrs. Gwyneth Grube, CCF, Toronto; Eglinton; Mrs. Inez Somers, Liberal, Toronto Greenwood; Miss Margot Thompson, CCF, Toronto St. Paul's; Mrs. Dorothy Cureatz, Social Credit, Toronto Spadina; Mrs. Marjorie Oliver, Liberal, Waterloo South; Mrs. Elva Siegen, CCF, York Scarborough; and Miss Rose Sark, CCF, York West.
In Manitoba, the only woman candidate, Mrs. Nina Partrick, Liberal, lost in Winnipeg North. The Conservatives took the seat from the CCF.
The two Saskatchewan women candidates, Liberal Mrs. Jessie Caldwell in Saskatoon and Mrs. Thora Wiggins, CCF, in Prince Albert, were defeated. Both ridings remained with the Conservatives.
There were two women candidates in Alberta—Mrs. Sadie Schrader, Liberal, who lost as the Conservatives took Red Deer from Social Credit—and Mrs. Nancy Zaseyda of the CCF, who suffered a similar fate in Vegreville.
The only woman candidate on the west coast, Miss Hilda Cryderman, ran out in Okanagan-Revelstoke as Conservatives unseated the Social Credit member.

Mrs. Thompson Advises
Girl's Experience All Men Are Wolves

By ELIZABETH THOMPSON
HERE is the sad story of a girl who says that all the men she meets are wolves.
Dear Mrs. Thompson: Some time ago, girls asked you where they could meet some nice (decent should be the word) men. You told them they should join a social club, attend church groups and would meet nice fellows there.
That is what I thought too, Mrs. Thompson, but apparently there just aren't any decent men around. If there were before, they are all married now, but the ones around now just don't know what decency is. They just don't have any respect for the girls now.

I met a fellow who attends church every Sunday. When I met him, through my girl friend's brother, I thought he was very nice, and very well-mannered, and all my friends liked him.
When it was time to leave, he drove several people home, and as we lived in the same direction, I was the last one he took home. When we got to the house, he said to wait a minute, as he wanted to talk, but talking is not what he had in mind. Believe me, I had to put up quite a fight, finally got hold of the handle and jumped out.

What is the matter with these men, Mrs. Thompson? Why is it that when a fellow takes a girl out, he thinks he is going to get his way? Have they forgotten decency, or having respect for girls? I don't think they know what it means. How can the girl go out with them again — and there are those who phone and ask for a date again. How can you trust them? I wish they would smarten up, find out that you can have clean fun, and not judge all girls by themselves. One rotten apple doesn't always spoil the barrel, as the saying goes.

I don't very often go out, but when I do, I like to think I'm out with a gentleman, not a rat. But it seems I always latch on to men with low morals. I think I'll continue being an old maid, because if I can't trust a man and have a nice time with him without worrying about what comes next, there just isn't any use going out with him. I'd sooner sit and watch a wrestling match on TV instead of wrestling myself. Besides, I haven't learned the holes too well. I would love to, though; then I certainly would have a ball throwing some of these rats around.

I am no youngster, but 30 years old. Another thing that makes me mad is that when a girl is over 20, the guy always thinks that she has been around and knows the score. Well, there are girls who haven't been around, and who are old-fashioned. I for one believe in waiting for Mr. Right, and should I marry, I'd still have the right to wear a white dress.

DISGUSTED WITH MEN
WHILE your principles do you credit, if you go around expecting the worst of every man you meet, you won't make a very good impression. He might even think you were waiting for passes to be made. Of course a few men are psychopathic personalities, but though the man you describe was crude and uncouth, I doubt whether he falls into that category.

As you say yourself, most men your age are married, and so are most girls. Some bachelors over 30 are not the marrying kind — though they may settle down eventually — and a proportion of these consider affairs their privilege. When they meet mature, attractive unmarried girls they may think they are the same type, so make these advances which infuriate you. But be honest — would they infuriate all girls?

When a man phones a girl after being brushed off, it is a compliment of a kind. It means he is interested even if she doesn't play the same kind of a game he does. While he may hope to change her attitude, it is possible she may change his. Plenty of girls have married men who made propositions before proposing. They are not first class husband material, mined by her dress, manner, voice and conversation. Since you got the treatment you did from this man who drove you home, he may have misunderstood something about you. Even an over-eagerness to please could be misinterpreted. However, some men will try anything.

My advice is to cultivate a genuine enthusiasm for some hobby or recreation, and when you meet men, take it for granted they will treat you with respect. Also, cultivate men who are still single because of family obligations, paying for education, or working hard at careers — avoid the professional playboys. But if your luck continues to be bad, inquire about classes in judo or self-defence.
